Chapter 16 · Stage 7 — Tip

Ask on the day a specific good thing happens. Gratitude has a short half-life.

THE TRIGGER

Your monthly report asks what closed (asset 17). When a client reports a job won — that day, in that conversation.

Add it to your reporting checklist: "Client reported a job won → ask that day."

THE ASK — A CATEGORY, NOT "ANYONE"

"Do you know anyone?" makes him search everyone he knows while standing in a parking lot. Almost everyone says "let me think about it," which means no.

Name the group. Adjacent trades are the best version — a landscaper knows a tree guy, a mason, a fence installer. None compete with him.

``` "That's the {{Nth}} job off this — nice.

Quick thing while I've got you. Who else do you know doing {{ADJACENT TRADE}} around here? Not asking you to sell anything — just whether there's someone I should introduce myself to."

[He names someone.]

"Perfect. Easiest thing: text him my name and say I did {{specific thing}} for you. I'll take it from there. Want me to send you something you can just forward?" ```

THE FORWARDABLE MESSAGE — SEND IT THE SAME DAY

Most referrals die between willing and done, because writing the message is a small task that never reaches the top of the list. So write it for him.

"Hey {{NAME}} — the guy who handles our booked estimates is {{YOUR NAME}}. He set up the system that's been filling our calendar since {{MONTH}}. Local, over in {{TOWN}}. Worth a conversation. His number is {{NUMBER}}."

Short enough to forward without editing. Written in his voice, not yours.

TESTIMONIAL — SAME MOMENT

Ask for something specific. General praise produces adjectives.

"Would you mind saying what your calendar looked like before we started, and what it looks like now? Even just a voice note — thirty seconds is fine."

Voice notes are easier to give and far more convincing.

PERMISSION — GET IT IN WRITING

Before using any client's name, logo, numbers, or words, get written permission naming exactly what you may use and where. An email reply is fine. Keep it.

"Quick admin thing — mind if I use your name and the appointment numbers when I talk about what I do? Happy to keep it anonymous if you'd rather, just wanted to ask."

Two rules on top: - FTC Endorsement Guides (rev. July 2023): claims must be truthful and represent typical results; material connections must be disclosed clearly and conspicuously. If you paid, discounted, or gave anything for a testimonial, disclose it. - Don't imply an outcome is what a new client should expect unless it genuinely is. In Massachusetts, an overstated claim also runs into c. 93A.

Describe what happened. Don't promise it will happen again.

REFERRED LEADS ENTER THE PIPELINE SHORT

Not the cold sequence. Name the referrer in the first line and ask directly for the call.

"Hey {{NAME}} — {{REFERRER}} passed your name along. I handle his booked estimates. He said you might be worth talking to. Free {{day}} or {{day}}?"

Track referred separately. The gap between referred and cold close rates is the cash value of your delivery quality.
