Chapter 15 · Stage 6 — Proof

Nobody cancels the day they decide to. By the time you get the message, the decision is old.

THE LEADING INDICATORS — CHECK WEEKLY

SIGNAL	MEANS	WINDOW
Stopped opening the dashboard	Usage churn — still paying, already gone	Days
Slower to reply	You've dropped in priority	1-2 weeks
Appointments not marked shown/won	Not following up, or not tracking	Days
Show rate falling, booking steady	His follow-through, not your delivery	Immediately
Asking what something costs	Doing arithmetic about you	Immediately
"Can we hop on a call?" with no topic	Often the cancellation call	Before that call
Quiet after a bad month	Deciding	Immediately

THE CHECK-IN — EVERY 2 TO 3 WEEKS

Acknowledge · Compliment · Ask. Two minutes.

``` "Saw you closed the {{specific job}} from the appointment that came in {{day}}.

That's the {{Nth}} one from {{source}} this month — that channel's working for you.

Quick question: are those the kind of jobs you want more of, or would you rather I push toward {{other type}}?" ```

Bigger clients generally want less hand-holding. If he replies in three words, send shorter messages, not longer ones.

THE SAVE CONVERSATION

Get them on the phone. Text and email cancellations are nearly impossible to reverse.

1 · Let them say the whole thing. Don't defend anything until they've finished. The complaint you interrupt isn't the real one.

2 • Get more annoyed about it than they are. Only one person gets the angry seat. Take it.

"That's completely fair, and honestly it's on me. That shouldn't have happened."

3 • Find the specific unmet expectation.

"So if the appointments had been showing up at the rate we talked about, you'd have stayed?"

Now you know whether it's fixable.

4 • Offer one of two things. Not five.

``` REDO: "Give me [30 days]. I'll fix [specific thing] by [date] and if it's not there, we stop and I won't chase you."

REFIT: "Honestly I think you need [smaller scope / something else]. Want me to set that up, or would you rather I point you to someone who does it better?" ```

5 • If they go, let them go cleanly. Export their data, hand over accounts per the agreement, thank them. In a market of 200 businesses inside twenty minutes, how someone leaves is what gets repeated.

SAY IT AT ONBOARDING

"If you ever want to stop, I just ask for fifteen minutes first — either I fix it or I learn something."

Costs nothing at signing. Converts a cancellation email into a conversation later.

THE QUARTERLY CONVERSATION

- What's working that you want more of?
- What's not worth what it costs?
- Has anything changed in the business I should know about?
- What would make this a 10 out of 10 next quarter?

AFTER EVERY LOSS

| CLIENT | MONTHS | THEIR STATED REASON | WHAT ACTUALLY BROKE | WHAT CHANGED |
|--------|--------|---------------------|---------------------|--------------|
|--------|--------|---------------------|---------------------|--------------|

If the same reason appears twice, that's a process problem, not a mistake.
